

CURSO DE LECTO-COMPREENSIÓN
DE TEXTOS MÉDICOS EN INGLÉS

Prof. Carina Jovović

IV) IDENTIFICAR LOS 20 ELEMENTOS FRONTALIZADOS EN LAS ORACIONES Y CLASIFICAR LA FRONTALIZACIÓN

Slowly, he walked into the room. Occupying almost the whole of one wall was an enormous fireplace and in front of the fire lay an equally enormous dog. A cat was sleeping peacefully next to the dog. In the middle of the room was a table, and lying on the table were two letters, clearly addressed to him. He opened one of them, glanced at it quickly and threw it on the fire. The second he read more carefully before putting it into his pocket.

At that moment the door opened and there stood Fiona, his ex-wife, which was something of a surprise, to put it mildly. How she had got into the house, he had no idea. That she was even in Britain came as a bit of a shock; he had thought her to be in Paris. She was a clothes designer, and to further her career in the fashion world, she had moved there some time before. And further her career she had certainly done; these days he could hardly open a paper without seeing her name.

But to see her acting as if she owned the place didn't really surprise him. For her, it was typical. Much more surprising was the way she was dressed - in a smart business two-piece suit. He couldn't remember ever having seen her in a suit before. Particularly impressive was the slim leather briefcase she held in her gloved hand. Not quite so reassuring, however, was the gigantic suitcase she was towing behind her; a flying visit this was obviously not. But, strange though it sounds, he was really rather pleased to see her.

- | | |
|-----|-----|
| 1) | 11) |
| 2) | 12) |
| 3) | 13) |
| 4) | 14) |
| 5) | 15) |
| 6) | 16) |
| 7) | 17) |
| 8) | 18) |
| 9) | 19) |
| 10) | 20) |